RESPONSE

1. This office action is in response to Applicant's Response dated Aug. 11, 2003.
2. Claims 1-7 were rejected and remain rejected upon review.

Examiner's reply: With respect to page 4, terms of speculation are used, including "highly unlikely", "highly improbable" and "might" are not conclusive by not being substantiated in fact by Applicant.

With respect to page 5, pay for view is well known as in the internet dating services and HBO; it would have been obvious to bill for a specific program as it would have been to bill for time as the telephone company does for internet usage.

With respect to page 6, it is obvious for one to segregate the billing aspect to a third party provider of such services if the website is not capable of performing the function as Ebay does with Payroll.

With respect to page 7, it would be obvious to make optional that which is presumably mandatory in this context for user flexibility by offering a choice.

With respect to page 8, it is well known that a credit card company as a third party bills the consumer on behalf of the vendor. Thus the use of intermediaries, brokers and agents is well known in the financial aspects of the retail art .

In summary, Examiner states that an ISP (internet service provider) can provide the services that Applicant claims as his invention. It is well know that these include billing and number of hits for a site which are operations a very small website cannot perform. As the telephone company times internet usage, an ISP can also apply analogous software to time the usage for a website.
